1. The first step in the process of settlement is the identification of the parties to the dispute. This is usually done by the mediator or the court. Once the parties are identified, the mediator or the court will attempt to bring them together for a settlement conference.

2. The second step is the identification of the issues in dispute. This is usually done by the mediator or the court. Once the issues are identified, the mediator or the court will attempt to bring the parties together for a settlement conference.

3. The third step is the identification of the interests of the parties. This is usually done by the mediator or the court. Once the interests are identified, the mediator or the court will attempt to bring the parties together for a settlement conference.

4. The fourth step is the negotiation of a settlement. This is usually done by the mediator or the court. Once the parties have identified their interests, the mediator or the court will attempt to bring them together for a settlement conference. The mediator or the court will facilitate the negotiation process and help the parties reach a mutually agreeable settlement.
